A Message from the Director General

The National Archives Administration serves the role of protector of government records, transmitter of government information, and promoter of government knowledge, and works vigorously to advance archives management in Taiwan in accordance with the Strategic Plan for Archives Management (2002-2011). Following the implementation of the Archives Act, archives management in government agencies has moved steadily in the direction of modernization and computerization over the past four years, thereby successfully accomplishing the vital task of passing on the nation's cultural and knowledge assets.

The National Archives Administration is continuing the publication of its annual reports with this 2005 edition to serve as a record of the evolution of our archives management. The content follows up on the information contained in the previous annual report, and some of the annual statistics which are useful in year-to-year comparison are listed side by side for ease of use. We hope that this will help our readers to get comprehensive understanding of the ongoing development of our archives management work.

As the locomotive of archive management in Taiwan, the NAA handed in a brilliant report card in 2005. Looking to the future, the near-term archives repository, the Kodak building, is put into use this year, there will be larger space for the storage of national archives. We will map out more comprehensive strategies for the acquisition, selection, and transfer of national archives so as to collect national archives step by step. In addition, we continue preparatory work for the establishment of our first National Archives Building. To facilitate the access of archives, we will provide more comprehensive services of archives in accordance with the “White Paper on Archives Customer Service.” Finally, we will continuously review the NAA’s organization and functions in line with the government-reengineering program in order to guide the development of our archives management onto the path of stable growth.

Performance of Archives Management Information System

1. Information System Plan

The key items of National Archives Information System Plan (2003-2006) in 2005 were:

- (1) Features augmentation of the National Archives Information System in accordance with the revision of archives cataloging units and related laws;
- (2) Provision of on-job training and consultation services;
- (3) Continued outsourcing for image scanning of national archives;
- (4) Establishment of a basic framework for knowledge management system.

2. Development of Records Management Application Systems

(1) Establishment of a Nation-wide Archives Information Management System

- a. By Dec. 31, 2005 more than 4,000 agencies had used NAA-developed archives cataloging and filing software and testing software, and about 6,300 agencies had applied for accounts to transmit archives catalog online.
- b. Barrier free webpages of National Electronic Archives Retrieve was established to improve accessibility to data of archives catalog in webpages for vision-impaired disables.

(2) Continued Expansion of Electronic Document Management System Functions

By the end of 2005, eight agencies had been assisted in introducing the Electronic Document Management System, and the functions of the system had been continuously expanded. The Guidelines for the Computerization of Agency Archives Management were revised to add rules for the on-line approval of electronic documents and packaging procedures for other audio and video files.

(3) Establishment of the National Archives Information System

The system was inaugurated for public use in June 2005, and new functions including a new multi-level description mechanism for special files as well as a four-level (fond, series/subseries, file folder, item) archives searching and browsing mechanism were completed in December.

(4) Establishment of the Virtual Archives

Archives concerning the 921 Earthquake, National Assembly, Formosa Incident, and 228 Incident were displayed in Chinese, English, children's, and barrier free versions for visual disables, remote browsing by the public via the website, virtual reality, and guided display methods beginning in June of 2005.

(5) Operation of the Nation-wide Archives Knowledge Management System

Development and design of the agency records transfer and follow-up control tracking system was carried out to satisfy the requirements of the organizational reforms resulting from government reengineering.

Future Prospects

In line with the advent of e-government era, the review and revision of the Archives Act in response to the rapid changes taking place in the internal and external archives management environment, are in their final stages and the upcoming revision will certainly help bring greater facility to the archives management operations of government agencies. The completion of a near-term repository for the national archives during this year will be an important milestone in the history of archives in Taiwan, and another major task for the NAA this year is to bring our first National Archives Hall to birth. In pursuit of the goal of effecting of improving the quality of archives information operations year by year, we will actively map out a “Follow-up Plan for the National Archives Information System” and, using the ISO-27001:2005 information security management system as our standard, continue striving to carry out our various information security tasks and reinforce the NAA’s archives information security system under the principle of making information security a part of life while systemizing, linking, humanizing, and popularizing it, and providing more information security value. In addition, this year the NAA will again conduct a survey of archives management in government agencies nation-wide with the aim of diagnosing the current situation regarding the agencies’ archives management, helping our archives management partners throughout the country to formulate measures for improvement, and together creating a brighter future for archives management.
